How Can we Combat Bullying?

Bullying is an everyday phenomenon in school environments. I feel shocked when I see kids of my age attacking their classmates and I am deeply hurt seeing how helpless and devastated people are when being bullied.

Thinking about ways to stop bullying, I wonder if punishment alone is effective. I recently witnessed a bullying incident at school. Even though the bully was punished, I doubt whether the punishment will prevent this person from behaving in the same way in the future. That is because, although punishment acts as a deterrent, it does not make people understand why such behavior is unacceptable.

To my mind, there should be a psychologist in every school. Psychologists could not only support victims but also prevent incidents of violence by recognizing aggressive attitudes. Furthermore, teachers ought to nurture respect and altruism among students. A teacher could achieve this by encouraging children to collaborate. When working in groups, students become more tolerant and less competitive.

In conclusion, however hard it is to combat bullying, there are effective measures we could take. All we have to do is try to correct violent behavior and not just punish such behavior after an incident has occurred.
